- 1A. Total number of T responses: dopamine nature _____
- 2A. Total number of T responses: acetylcholine nature _____
- 3A. Total number of T responses: GABA nature _____
- 4A. Total number of T responses: serotonin nature _____

The category with the greatest number of true responses will identify your dominant nature. A classically dominant nature is typically a score of 35 and above in any one category, which suggests a less-than-balanced life.

Note: When any other nature is 10-15 points lower than the dominant one, the nature with the lower score is probably a lifelong relative deficiency and needs balance even in times of good health. For example, if your score is 40 dopamine, 33 acetylcholine, 25 GABA, and 17 serotonin, you likely have long-standing relative deficiencies in both GABA and serotonin.

Circle the highest number. This is your most deficient nature, the one that is most likely to lead to illness. Your deficient nature can be the same as or different from your dominant nature. In fact, you'll most likely recognize deficits in your dominant nature sooner than you would in other aspects of your biochemistry, simply because you are used to behaving and feeling a specific way.

Any category with up to 5 true statements is considered a minor deficiency. Any category with between 6 and 15 true statements is considered a moderate deficiency. If you have more than 15 true statements in any one category, this indicates a major deficiency.

The assessment test will bring out two kinds of deficiencies. The first part of the test (A) points up deficiencies that are the natural result of having one neurotransmitter as dominant. These deficiencies show up over time. The second part of the test (B) uncovers deficiencies that may require more immediate attention.
